"LIFE," ſays Seneca, "is a Voyage, in the Progreſs of "which, we are perpetually changing our Scenes; we "firſt leave Childhood behind us, then Youth, then the "Years of ripened Manhood, then the better and more "pleaſing Part of old Age." The Peruſal of this Paſſage, having excited in me a Train of Reflections on the State of Man, the inceſſant Fluctuation of his Wiſhes, the gradual Change of his Diſpoſition to all external Objects, and the Thoughtleſneſs with which he floats along the Stream of Time, I ſunk into a Slumber amidſt my Meditations, and, on a ſudden, found my Ears filled with the Tumult of Labour, the Shouts of Alacrity, the Shrieks of Alarm, the Whiſtle of Winds, and the Daſh of Waters.

My Aſtoniſhment for a Time repreſſed my Curioſity; but ſoon recovering myſelf ſo far as to enquire whither we were going, and what was the Cauſe of ſuch Clamour and Confuſion, I was told that they were launching out into the Ocean of Life; that we had already paſſed the Streights of Infancy, in which Multitudes had periſhed, ſome by the Weakneſs and Fragility of their Veſſels, and more by the Folly, Perverſeneſs, or Negligence, of thoſe who undertook to ſteer them; and that we were now on the main Sea, abandoned to the Winds and Billows, without any other Means of Security, than the Care of the Pilot, whom it was always in our Power to chooſe among great Numbers that offered their Direction and Aſſiſtance.

I then looked round with anxious Eagerneſs: And firſt turning my Eyes behind me, ſaw a Stream flowing through flowery Iſlands, which every one that ſailed along ſeemed to behold with Pleaſure; but no ſooner touched, than the Current, which, though not noiſy or turbulent, was yet irreſiſtible, bore him away. Beyond theſe Iſlands all was Darkneſs, nor could any of the Paſſengers deſcribe the Shore at which he firſt embarked.

Before me, and each other Side, was an Expanſe of Waters violently agitated, and covered with ſo thick a Miſt, that the moſt perſpicacious Eye could ſee but a little Way. It appeared to be full of Rocks and Whirlpools, for many ſunk unexpectedly while they were courting the Gale with full Sails, and inſulting thoſe whom they had left behind. So numerous, indeed, were the Dangers, and ſo thick the Darkneſs, that no Caution could confer Security. Yet there were many, who, by falſe Intelligence, betrayed their Followers into Whirlpools, or by Violence puſhed thoſe whom they found in their Way againſt the Rocks.

The Current was invariable and inſurmountable; but though it was impoſſible to ſail againſt it, or to return to the Place that was once paſſed, yet it was not ſo violent as to allow no Opportunities for Dexterity or Courage, ſince, though none could retreat back from Danger, yet they might often avoid it by oblique Direction.

It was, however, not very common to ſteer with much Care or Prudence; for, by ſome univerſal Infatuation, every man appeared to think himſelf ſafe, though he ſaw his Conſorts every Moment ſinking round him; and no ſooner had the Waves cloſed over them, than their Fate and their Miſconduct were forgotten; the Voyage was purſued with the ſame jocund Confidence; every Man congratulated himſelf upon the Soundneſs of his Veſſel, and believed himſelf able to ſtem the Whirlpool in which his Friend was ſwallowed, or glide over the Rocks on which he was daſhed; nor was it often obſerved that the Sight of a Wreck made any Man change his Courſe; if he turned aſide for a Moment, he ſoon forgot the Rudder, and left himſelf again to the Diſpoſal of Chance.

This Negligence did not proceed from Indifference, or from Wearineſs of their preſent Condition; for not one of thoſe, who thus ruſhed upon Deſtruction, failed, when he was ſinking, to call loudly upon his Aſſociates for that Help which could not now be given him; and many ſpent their laſt Moments in cautioning others againſt the Folly, by which they were intercepted in the Midſt of their Courſe. Their Benevolence was ſometimes praiſed, but their Admonitions were unregarded.

The Veſſels, in which we had embarked, being confeſſedly unequal to the Turbulence of the Stream of Life, were viſibly impaired in the Courſe of the Voyage; ſo that every Paſſenger was certain, that how long ſoever he might, by favourable Accidents, or by inceſſant Vigilance, be preſerved, he muſt ſink at laſt.

This Neceſſity of periſhing might have been expected to ſadden the gay, and intimidate the daring, at leaſt to keep the melancholy and timorous in perpetual Torments, and hinder them from any Enjoyment of the Varieties and Gratifications which Nature offered them as the Solace of their Labours; yet in Effect none ſeemed leſs to expect Deſtruction than thoſe to whom it was moſt dreadful; they all had the Art of concealing their Danger from themſelves; and thoſe who knew their Inability to bear the Sight of the Terrors that embarraſſed their Way, took Care never to look forward, but found ſome Amuſement for the preſent Moment, and generally entertained themſelves by playing with HOPE, who was the conſtant Aſſociate of the Voyage of Life.

Yet all that HOPE ventured to promiſe, even to thoſe whom ſhe favoured moſt, was, not that they ſhould eſcape, but that they ſhould ſink laſt; and with this Promiſe every one was ſatisfied, though he laughed at the Reſt for ſeeming to believe it. HOPE, indeed, apparently mocked the Credulity of her Companions; for in Proportion as their Veſſels grew leaky, ſhe redoubled her Aſſurances of Safety; and none were more buſy in making Proviſions for a long Voyage, than they, whom all but themſelves ſaw likely to periſh ſoon by irreparable Decay.

In the Midſt of the Current of Life was the Gulf of INTEMPERANCE, a dreadful Whirlpool, interſperſed with Rocks, of which the pointed Crags were concealed under Water, and the Tops covered with Herbage, on which EASE ſpread Couches of Repoſe, and with Shades, where PLEASURE warbled the Song of Invitation. Within Sight of theſe Rocks all who ſailed on the Ocean of Life muſt neceſſarily paſs. REASON, indeed, was always at Hand to ſteer the Paſſengers through a narrow Outlet by which they might eſcape; but very few could, by her Intreaties or Remonſtrances, be induced to put the Rudder into her Hand, without ſtipulating that ſhe ſhould approach ſo near unto the Rocks of PLEASURE, that they might ſolace themſelves with a ſhort Enjoyment of that delicious Region, after which they always determined to purſue their Courſe without any other Deviation.

REASON was too often prevailed upon ſo far by theſe Promiſes, as to venture her Charge within the Eddy of the Gulph of INTEMPERANCE, where, indeed, the Circumvolution was weak, but yet interrupted the Courſe of the Veſſel, and drew it by inſenſible Rotations, towards the Centre. She then repented her Temerity, and with all her Force endeavoured to retreat; but the Draught of the Gulph was generally too ſtrong to be overcome; and the Paſſenger, having danced in Circles with a pleaſing and giddy Velocity, was at laſt overwhelmed and loſt. Thoſe few whom REASON was able to extricate, generally ſuffered ſo many Shocks upon the Points which ſhot out from the Rocks of PLEASURE, that they were unable to continue their Courſe with the ſame Strength and Facility as before, but floated along timorouſly and feebly, endangered by every Breeze, and ſhattered by every Ruffle of the Water, 'til they ſunk, by ſlow Degrees, after long Struggles, and innumerable Expedients, always repining at their own Folly, and warning others againſt the firſt Approach to the Gulph of INTEMPERANCE.

There were Artiſts who profeſſed to repair the Breaches and ſtop the Leaks of the Veſſels which had been ſhattered on the Rocks of PLEASURE. Many appeared to have great Confidence in their Skill, and ſome, indeed, were preſerved by it from ſinking, who had received only a ſingle Blow; but I remarked that few Veſſels laſted long which had been much repaired, nor was it found that the Artiſts themſelves continued afloat longer than thoſe who had leaſt of their Aſſiſtance.

The only Advantage, which, in the Voyage of Life, the Cautious had above the Negligent, was, that they ſunk later, and more ſuddenly; for they paſſed forward 'til they had ſometimes ſeen all thoſe in whoſe Company they had iſſued from the Streights of Infancy, periſh in the Way, and at laſt were overſet by a croſs Breeze, without the Toil of Reſiſtance, or the Anguiſh of Expectation. But ſuch as had often fallen againſt the Rocks of Pleaſure, commonly ſubſided by ſenſible Degrees, contended long with the encroaching Waters, and haraſſed themſelves by Labours that ſcarce Hope herſelf could flatter with Succeſs.

As I was looking upon the various Fate of the Multitude about me, I was ſuddenly alarmed with an Admonition from ſome unknown Power, "Gaze not idly upon others when thou thyſelf art ſinking. Whence is "this thoughtleſs Tranquillity, when thou and they are equally endan-"gered?" I looked, and ſeeing the Gulph of Intemperance before me, ſtarted and awaked.

PARIS, A-la-main, September 4.

LAST Friday Mr. Moor, an Iriſhman, and the Baron de Starke, a German, proved before the King at Choiſy, a Mortar of their Invention, which was diſcharged more eaſily and in much leſs Time than other Mortars; they diſcharged fifteen Bombs of 50 lb. Weight in leſs than five Minutes, and the Bombs followed each other with ſuch Velocity, that two of them were often ſeen in the Air at the ſame Time. His Majeſty appeared well ſatisfied with this Invention.

Extract of a Letter from Cracow, Auguſt 21.

"According to the laſt Letters from Conſtantinople, they take the late Revolution there to be only a Prelude to a more terrible one, which ſeems to threaten the Grand Signior himſelf. Depoſitions, Baniſhments, and the moſt tragick Executions have not appeaſed the Janiſſaries. 'Tis not the Diſgrace of the Favourites they demand, 'tis the Sovereign's Reſolutions they would fain fix to their own Liking. His Sublime Highneſs's Thoughts are turned to Peace, and they would have him to pluck up a martial Spirit: In fine, the outrageous and imperious Clamour of that inſolent Soldiery amounts to nothing leſs than this, either a War or a new Sultan.

Sultan. In a Situation ſo critical the Grand Signior knows not what to reſolve upon: He is at Peace with the European Powers, and 'tis againſt them, as theſe Letters pretend, that the Janiſſaries demand to be led. If his Highneſs, following the Dictates of his peaceable, equitable Temper, refuſes to comply with their unjuſt and impetuous Deſires, he runs the Riſque of being tumbled out of his Throne, which Solyman a warlike and enterprizing Prince may then ſtep into.

The Treaſure found in the Houſe of the Kiſlar Aga, of which he himſelf ſent the Keys to the Grand Signior, are immenſe and almoſt incredible. They compute them at 80,000 Purſes of 500 Crowns each, that is forty Millions of Crowns; a Fund ſufficient, as the Janiſſaries pretend, to carry on the moſt vigorous War. It is hardly poſſible to conceive how a Subject, an Ottoman Slave, could come to be Maſter of ſo vaſt a Treaſure; but if one conſider that the Kiſlar Aga, by the Aſcendance he had gained over the Grand Signior, was in a Manner ſole Maſter of the Empire and its Riches, and that he loaded the People with extraordinary Impoſts, for which he accounted with no Body, we may eaſily conceive the Means whereby he grew ſo prodigiouſly rich.

LONDON,

Auguſt 1. This Week Thomas Lacon, of the Pariſh of Rotherhith, Wood Turner, was committed to the New-Goal, Southwark, by William Hammond, Eſq; charged with ſtanding indicted at the laſt Seſſion of Oyer and Terminer, holden at Guildford, in and for the County of Surry, for wilful and corrupt Perjury, committed by him in a Proſecution of Felony, carried on againſt Mr. James Turpin, his Maſter, of the ſame Pariſh and Trade, a conſiderable Dealer in all Manner of hard Wood, and a Perſon of a fair and honeſt Character: A ſhort Detail of which is as follows, viz. About September, 1750, Mr. Turpin detected his Man in robbing him of ſome valuable Wood, and cauſed him to be taken into Cuſtody, with an Intent to have had him puniſhed according to Law; but at the ſpecial Deſire of ſome of his Friends, he forgave the Offence and diſmiſſed him his Service: Inſtead of making grateful Acknowledgments of his Maſter's Lenity, he made it his Buſineſs to ſeek every Opportunity to ruin him; and as this was about the Time that the Aſſociation of Merchans were carrying on Proſecutions againſt many Perſons for Depredations committed on the River Thames (a favourable Opportunity, without any Expence to himſelf, to effect the Deſtruction of his Maſter) he applied to thoſe Gentlemen, and made an Information againſt him, for feloniouſly ſtealing twenty hundred Pounds Weight of Logwood, the Property of Perſons unknown; purſuant thereto he was taken into Cuſtody, and on the 11th Day of December following he was committed to the New-Goal Southwark: At the enſuing Aſſizes held at Kingſton upon Thames on the 28th Day of March 1751, he was indicted for the ſaid Felony; and as he expected to be tried for the ſame at that Time, he had taken Care to ſubpœna a great Number of Witneſſes, who gave their Attendance at his Expence, and he was at a very extraordinary Charge in providing for his Defence; and was in no Manner of Doubt of an honourable Acquital, having ready ſufficient Vouchers to prove that he purchaſed the ſaid Wood in a legal Manner. Upon Lacon's being ſenſible of his Maſter's Innocence, and that if he was tried at theſe Aſſizes, he would certainly be acquitted, and his Intentions be fruſtrated thereby; therefore he farther contrives (effectually to ruin the poor Man and his Family) by making an Affidavit, that one John Smith, of Fountain Stairs, Rotherhith, Waterman, was a material Witneſs for him, and that he could not then be found, and for Want of his Teſtimony it was not ſafe to proceed to Trial: Upon which an Order was made for the Priſoner to remain in Goal 'til the next Aſſizes. But upon the Application of ſome Friends he was admitted to Bail, and at the enſuing Aſſizes he ſurrendered, agreeable to his Recognizance, and put himſelf upon his Trial, when after a ſhort Hearing he was honourably acquitted, his Innocence appearing inconteſtable to the whole Court.

Auguſt 21. We are credibly informed by a private Letter from Paris, that an Engliſh Lady of the firſt Quality, but more particularly diſtinguiſhed for her exquiſite Beauty, than has been there for ſome Time, had very nearly (but by a Prevention very timely and fortunate) met with an Inſult of the groſſeſt Kind, much to the Diſgrace of the Perſon that intended it, (and it may be obſerved) very little to the Credit of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty's Subjects, from whom Strangers, eſpecially of Diſtinction, demand Civility, which indeed hitherto has been the Characteriſtic of that polite Nation. We hear alſo, that the Lady with her Noble Conſort, are ſet out for the Spa within theſe few Days, probably to prevent too much Notice of this Affair, or any ſecond Attempt of the like Nature from a diſappointed and inſolent Man.

Auguſt 29. They write from Scotland, that her Grace the Dutcheſs of Hamilton is far advanced in her Pregnancy, and great Preparations are making for her Grace's Lying-in. Her Grace has given Orders, that every Thing ſhall be made of the Produce of Great-Britain.——Were Examples of this Kind in general ſet by our Nobility, it, like a Faſhion, will be followed by all: Then would our Manufactures increaſe, Trade flouriſh, and Great-Britain bid Defiance to all her Foes.

We hear from good Authority that his Majeſty intends to ſet out for his Britiſh Dominions as ſoon in October as the public Affairs will admit of.

The Jaſon Man of War, that lately ſailed from Portſmouth, is gone for America, with Inſtructions to the ſeveral Governors in thoſe Parts.

According to ſome Advices from Paris, the King did not ſuppreſs by an Arret of Council the late Remonſtrances of the Parliament of Toulouſe, becauſe he readily diſapproved the Matter and the Stile of them, but becauſe they publiſhed them in Print, which he thought a very imprudent Step; for though theſe Remonſtrances contained nothing but what was very fit for the Monarch to hear, yet as they bore a little too hard upon the Clergy, in Regard to their refuſing the Sacraments to ſuſpected Janſeniſts, his Majeſty judged them upon that Account very unfit for the Peruſal of the Publick, as having a Tendency to impair the Reſpect the People ought to have for their ſpiritual Guides, whom he would willingly keep within the Bounds of their Duty and Authority, but ſtill without too much expoſing the Raſhneſs, Ignorance, and furious, blind Zeal for the Conſtitution Unigenitus.

Worceſter, July 29. Yeſterday the four Highwaymen, under Sentence of Death in the County Goal for ſeveral Robberies, had formed a moſt deſperate Attempt to murder the Turnkeys, and make their Eſcape; but through the extraordinary Care and Vigilance of the Governor, who ever ſince the Aſſizes had kept a double Guard, they were happily prevented; and after a bloody Engagement, which laſted for ſome Minutes, they were reduced, and effectually ſecured from all further Attempts of the like Nature: And notwithſtanding the ill Treatment they had been guilty of, yet in Return they only received the moſt humane and gentle Rebukes, by being told, that the few Moments they had to live ſhould have been employed for better Purpoſes: The Governor added, that Nature herſelf pleaded their Excuſe for intending their Eſcape from their impending Sentence, but the Crime of effecting it by Murder required the deepeſt Repentance; and he hoped, before it was too late, they would be fully ſenſible of it, and prayed God to forgive them, as he did, for the cruel Violence offered to himſelf and all his Family.

NEWBERN, October 20.

On Monday laſt were executed at the Gallows near this Town, purſuant to their Sentence, Daniel Johnſton, alias Dixon, William Jillet,, and David Smith, alias Griffith, (ſee Gaz. N°. 92.) They were attended to the Gallows by the Rev. Mr. Lapierre, who alſo attended them while in Goal. They all appeared very penitent, and expreſs'd much Sorrow and Contrition for their Crimes, which they confeſs'd; and Jillet and Johnſton declar'd Patrick Moor to have been the ſole Contriver and Promoter of the wretched Scheme, for which they ſuffer'd, and which would have been ſo deſtructive to the Community, had it ſucceeded. Johnſton died a ſtanch Roman Catholick, and was very earneſt and pathetic in his Prayers for the Friends and Followers of the Lords Lovat, Kilmarnock, Balmerino, and all the Rebels that ſuffer'd in the late Rebellion, and heartily pray'd for a Continuance of that noble Spirit, which he hop'd was yet alive in Scotland among the Well-wiſhers of the Pretender.

They made ſeveral Attempts, while in Goal, to eſcape; but were prevented by the Sheriff, who kept a Watch round the Priſon every Night; and indeed it has been entirely owing to his great Vigilance and Induſtry, that theſe Peſts of Society were firſt apprehended, and preſerv'd ſafe in a Goal, (which has hitherto been remarkable for letting Priſoners eſcape) 'til they receiv'd the Reward due to their Crimes.
